General Notes.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal, WASHINGTON, Nov. 16 .- Claude N. Douglass, of Indiana, has been appointed receiving clerk in the General Land Office, at a salary of $1,800. A dispatch from the City of Mexico reporting that ex-Minister Foster had presented claims against Mexico to the amount of $20,000,000, is without foundation in fact. Mr. Foster went to Mexico on private business and presented no claims against that government.

The Secretary of the Treasury has accepted the offer of Jacob Wheeler to pay $2,000 in compromise of the suit pending against him and the sureties on his bond as late United States marshal for the Southern district of Illinois, for the recovery of illegal fees charged by him. RELIGIOUS MATTERS.

Reception to Methodist Bishops, in Which There Is a Mild Savor of Politics.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Nov. 16 .- The Brooklyn Church Society this evening gave a reception at the Brooklyn Rink to the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church in this country, fourteen of the sixteen being present, as follows: Bishops Newman, Bowman, Merrill, Warren, Hurst, Foss, Foster, Andrews, Walden, Fitzgerald, Goodall, Vincent and Joyce. Wm. I. Preston presided, and addresses were made by Bishop Warren, Rev. Dr. J. O. Peck, Hon. Warner Miller and others. Dr. Peck, in his remarks, referred to Mr. Miller as the most distinguished son of New York who, if he did not occupy the Governor's chair, should be given a place in the presidential Cabi-net, which suggestion created tremendous applause. Dr. Peck dwelt at length on the necessity of the extension of missionary work, and closed his remarks with an appeal for a million and a half dollars for that purpose.

Hop. Warner Miller was introduced as the probable next Secretary of the Treasury, and made a stirring address, in which he eulogized the Methodist Church. After the speaking, refreshments were served and music rendered by the Twentieth Regiment Band.

The Nun of Kenmare Abandons Her Work. UTICA, N. Y., Nov. 16 .- Sister Mary Frances Clare, the "Nun of Kenmare" and recently Mother Superior of the Sisters of Peace, is now living in retirement in this city, engaged in literary work. To-day she made public her letter of resignation to Pope Leo XIII. The following is an extract from it:

"Holy Father-It is with great grief and regret that I address this letter to your Holiness. I am obliged to resign into your hands the office to which you were pleased to appoint me, and to leave to others the work of the Order of Peace, which your Holiness has authorized me to establish. I have not taken this step without long and careful consideration, for I see every day more and more the necessity of such work as this for working girls. They have, indeed, been the great support of the Roman Catholic Church, and they deserve all that can be done for their comfort and encouragement, but I have found such opposition to this work, which I so dearly love, from certain bishops whose influence is so powerful that other bishops do not like to support what they disapprove, even though it has the sanction of your Holiness, that I am obliged to retire from it. My health, always delicate, has given way under the pressure and pain of this discourage-

Methodist Foreign Missions.

Three thousand dollars was appropriated for the regular mission work; for Foo Chow, China, Central China, North China and West China, the appropriations aggregate $150,000; for Germany and Switzerland, $40,000.

Pierson, "Social and Entertainment Accessories in Christian Work;" Miss Grace H. Dodge, "The Colored Race in America," and Hon. W. H. Howland, "The Conversion of Children."

Sensational Story with Small Foundation. CHICAGO, Nov. 16 .- A sensational story was printed this morning, from Elgin, Ill., tending to connect a crazy man named George Hutchinson, a former patient at the Elgin Hospital for the Insane, with the London Whitechapel butcheries, which have borrifled the world. The story was to the effect that Hutchinson had escaped from the Elgin hospital, had beentrecaptured and sent to the Kankakee hospital, and es caping from there had come to Chicago and murdered a woman of the class to which belonged the victims of the Whitechapel murderer. He was again arrested, so goes the story, and returned to the Kankakee hospital, from which he afterward escaped, having now been four years at large. The detectives of the Chicago police department have no knowledge of the perpetration of a crime such as the one described, and have no record or photograph of a man named George Hutchinson. Lieutenant Elliott, when seen this morning, said: "I don't think there can be anything in the story. I do not remember any such case or any record of it. There is no picture in the rogue's gallery, to my knowledge, of any man named Hutchinson, and I never heard of any murder under the circumstances named. However, if there is any truth in the story it might prove a good clew to the indentity of the Whitechapel murderer. We will look it up." The Outrage on Major Logan.

EL PASO, Tex., Nov. 16.-Maj. T. H. Logan, of the Fifth Infantry, commanding at Fort Hancock, forty miles east of El Paso, who, together with three United States soldiers, was arrested which on a hunt across the Rio Grande, in Mexico, last Sunday, arrived here last evening. The party was arrested Sunday afternoon and detained till Tuesday morning. Major Logan says his captor were five in number, and did their work in regular "hold-up" style, drawing Winchesters on the Americans and disarming them. The capturing force belonged to the gen-darmes squad of the States, and they seem to be in bad repute with the Mexican citizens and customs officials, who expressed great indignation at the arrest. The president of the town of Guadaloupe, where the Major and his soldiers were taken, prevented their captors from locking them up, as they first propose to do. Major Logan says that the gen-darmes seemed entirely bent on spoils, and went so far as to discuss how much each of them would get from the sale of the Major's outfit. Major Logan says that in crossing the river to hunt he was merely doing what both Americans and Mexicans do daily, and that neither custom nor law, so far as he knows, justifies the capture, which he regards as an out-

The girl tells a frightful story of what took place when the men drove her and her companion from the main road into the bushes. THE WOMAN'S CONGRESS.

DETROIT, Mich., Nov. 16 .- The third and last day's session of the Woman's Congress was called to order at 10 o'clock this morning, and the election of officers at once proceeded with. Mrs. Julia Ward Howe was re-elected president. Twenty-five vice-presidents were selected from the various States represented: Gertrude K. Essby, of Delaware, was elected secretary; Henrietta L. T. Wolcott, Massachusetts, treasurer; Sophia Curtiss Hoffman, New York, and Mrs. Charlotte F. Pierce, Pennsylvania, auditors, and a board of directors composed of twenty-five members.

Mrs. Mary E. Bagg presided at the afternoon session. Mrs. Anna Jenness Miller, the exponent of dress reform, read a paper on "Correct Dress." "There is a real science of dress," she said, "criticism to the contrary notwithstanding; a science of beauty, utility and comfort; but the science is little understood yet. We may talk about moral courage." she continued, "but I should never have departed from the ways of the fashionable world if I had not first found out, by practical experiment, that I could serve both the gods of grace and comfort at the same time. I would not walk down Broadway in some of the costumes which the dear, good dress reformers before me have worn, in comfort of body and martyrdom of spirit, for a good round sum. To the really esthetic, that wretched hump, the bustle, has been nothing less than optical horror. Any woman would travel the world over to find a surgeon skilled enough to successfully remove its unsightliness had nature so endowed her. It is the same way with the close-fitted bodice, when worn over a tightly-laced corset. A woman makes shelves of her hips, her bust, her abdomen; but when every other woman is doing the same thing it is regarded as elegant, just as the ring in the nose of the savage or the ear-rings in the ears of civilized woman are regarded as ornamental. Physical development is absolutely impossible while woman clothes the body in a manner that ignores the first principles of vitality. The correct dress for women must be made absolutely without ligatures or bands." A short discussion was held on this paper, several of the delegates taking part. Rev. Ida C. Hultin, of Iowa, then presented her reasons for the necessity of "Women in the Ministry." Miss Calliops Kechigia, the Grecian educationalist, who has established schools in Athens and Constantinople, spoke briefly on educational matters, and this closed the afternoon session. To-night's session was opened by Miss Mary T. Eastman, of Tewksbury. Mass., who presented "The Legal Aspect of the Temperance Question," developing a strong anti-prohibition argument, made the more telling by avowed opposition to the liquor traffic. She was followed by Miss Minnie Phelps, of St. Catherines, Ont., in an argument from the prohibition The closing paper was read by Julia Ward

An hour later trains were in motion, and everything is harmonious again.

Kenman's chapter on Russian exiles is of the same absorbing interest as previous papers. "The New Reformation," by Lyman Abbott, relates to the changes in theological theories and behefs that have taken place the last century. A paper interesting to Biblical students is that entitled "Where Was the Place Called Calvary," by Charles S. Robinson, D. D. A paper entitled "Gravelotte Witnessed and Revisited" is contributed by Murat Halstead. George W. Cable begins a series of sketches with the general title of "Strange, True Stories of Louisians." The installment of the Lincoln history deals with Stonewall Jackson's valley campaign—the seven days' battles. "The Romance of Dollard," the serial begun in this number by Mrs. Mary Hartwell Catherwood, gives promise, from its style and intrinsic interest as well as its novelty of subject and scene, to be one of the notable works of fiction of the year. "Mistaken Premises" is a well-told, short story by Julia Schayer. The poems of the number are numerous. James Whitcomb Riley's "'Mongst the Hills o' Somerset" has already been reproduced in this paper. Other contribu-tors of verse are George Parsons Lathron Joaquin Miller, Ina Coolbrith, Edith M. Thomas, T. W. Parsons and H. S. Edwards, the latter's 'Mammy's Lil' Boy" being a song of a negro nurse, which is so musical as to almost sing itself in the reader's ears.

Of making magazines there is apparently no end. A new candidate for public favor is called the Home-maker. Its name indicates its character, and the fact that its chief editor is Marian Harland is a guarantee of its merit in that especial line. Periodicals devoted to household topics are many, and it would seem that the field had been covered, but a glance through the pages of The Home-maker shows some features not found in the others, and an ability good, the contents varied in character and the printing and illustrations excellent, Contributors to the November issue are Mary E. Wilkins, Catharine Owen, Kate Upson Clark, Rose Terry Cook, Harriet Prescott Spofford and others. Price, 20 cents per copy. No. 24 West Twenty-third street, New York.

Wide Awake is making an appeal to the children to build the dining-room of the Ramona Industrial School, at Santa Fe, and to this end is endeavoring to interest its readers in the Iudians, a story of Indian adventure forming the opening article of the November issue. A feature of this issue is the number of children's portraits among the illustrations. Several of these belong to the account of "The Household of John Quincy Adams," in the "Children of the White House" series. This is a very entertaining and historically-instructive article. Mrs. Sherweed's story, "Double Roses," is brought to a conclusion, with indications, however, that a sequel will follow. The magazine is filled with useful and entertaining matter, in the latter class being a chapter of instructions in the game of chess. The prospectus for the coming year promises new and varied attrac-

The Overland Monthly is distinctly a local publication, its contents being of a character to interest Pacific coast readers first of all. Its literary features are admirable, however, espe cially the fiction, which has an originality not always found among the contributions to more pretentious magazines. Among the papers of general interest in the November issue are "Grazing Lands," "The Largest Estate in the World," "The Ramabai Movement" and "Women on School Boards," the latter growing out of the nomination of six women for school directors in San Francisco.

The contents of November Outing are as follows: "Out-door Life of the Presidents," "Progress of Athletism," "A Damp Journey on a Down Grade," "The Rifle in the Sacramentos," "The Haunted Wheel." "To the Pacific Through Canada," "The New York Yacht Club Cruise of '88," "The Australian Base-ball Tour;" also, several poems and the usual editorial departments. For lovers of out-door sports and athletic pursuits this magazine is full of interest. 239 Fifth avenue, New York.

GLADSTONE AND HIS FAMILY.

The Devoted and Faithful Wife Is the Grand Old Man's Greatest Comfort. T. P. O'Connor, in New York World. I wrote you recently of my visit to Mr. Gladstone at Hawarden. I left some facts about his wife and his home life for another letter. Mr. Gladstone is adored by his family and he adores them in return. One can see this in a thousand facts. For instance, when you get to the rising ground in the park you see a fine red brick house; this is the residence of W. H. Gladstone, his eldest son. Further on in the village is the house of the rector of Hawarden, another son. I may mention that Mr. Gladstone apaiogized for the absence of Mrs. Gladstone, because a new grandson has just been born to them, the rector's wife being the mother. Herbert, the Benjamin of the household, and Mr. and Mrs. Drew-bis daughter and son-in-law-live with him. But of all the comforts of his home life Mrs. Gladstone is the greatest. She arranges every detail of his existence. I saw an example of it tives of the reputable business man who has just as we were speaking. One of the servants brought in a note. It was from Mrs. Gladstone: and I hope nobody will blame me for having an eye sharp enough to see that even this little scrap of a note began with the word "Dearest." "I'm to dine at Mr. Williams's to-night," said Mr. Gladstone to the servant, as though he had received his orders and was bound to obey. The candle was lighted and we kept talking on said, that I had come, and he would have been even more glad if I could have spent the night The small family party with which I dined consisted Mrs. Gladstone, Mr. and Mrs. Drew and Herbert Gladstone. After dinner we all started for the meeting; but I saw Mr. Glatstone once again before I left. I told Mrs. Gladstone that I had heard that John Bright's health was much worse than the public journals seemed to indicate. Mrs. Gladstone had communicated the news to Mr. Gladstone, and it disturbed him greatly. He came into the dining-room to ask me some further questions on the subject, and until at last it was 5:40, and very unwillingly I had to rise and leave him. He was glad, he though he remained composed outwardly-for composure is Mr. Gladstone's chief characteristic in private life-he seemed anxious. On the way to the meeting I had some scatter ing bits of conversation with Mrs. Gladstone. How beautiful is the affection of a wife for a husband when it is perfect, uniform, absolutely absorbed, as in the case of Mrs. Gladstone. She didn't want to talk on any other subject than Mr. Gladstone, but on that subject she was willing to talk forever. One might almost imagine that it was a young girl speaking of the youth that had caught her heart's first fancy. There was a strange pathos about her whole conversation-the stranger and stronger because of its innocent unconsciousness. She was very anxious about the meetings at Birmingham next week, which will certainly put a great strain upon Mr. Gladstone. One meeting especially. I think, should never have been allowed. It is in Bingley Hall, that holds some fabulous number of people-ten to twenty

"I hope," said Mrs. Gladstone, "that the people will be satisfied with seeing him, and that it will be explained that he can't be heard by them all. I am afraid of the meeting, because he has" -and then she used an expression which I think splendidly, though simply, describes Mr. Gladstone's character-"because he has such a heart that he'll try to make them all hear, and that will strain his voice and prevent his speaking in What she meant by his "heart" she further developed in reply to a question I put to her. I said I had always thought that Mr. Gladstone ought to have been Prime Minister long before he was. She gave as an explanation that he had always thrown himself so much into any work he had undertaken that he was always immersed in his own department. As an instance she referred to the time when he was vice-president of the Board of Trade. He was in despair when first appointed to this office by Sir Robert Peel. "Sir Robert," be said. "thinks I know something about businesss because my father was a merchant, but really I know no more about it than a baby.' But he persevered, and became thoroughly master of it. He never could do anything by halves, and perhaps he has often done a great deal more than he need have done. One other little incident will illustrate Mrs. Gladstope's feeling toward ber husband. Herbert Gladstone plays on the violoncello, and I asked him whether his father played on any instrument." "No," he said.

"Did he sing?" I then asked. Herbert hesitated, as though he were doubtful whether or not he could concede to his father the possession of vocal powers, but Mrs. Gladstone bad no such doubts.

Gladstone were first engaged they were at Rome: there was no pianoforte there, and she had no ides that he had a voice. But one day after her return she heard a beautiful voice, and she didn't know in the least whose it was. She went to the room whence the voice proceeded and discovered, to her great delight that it was that of her flance. Ireland was Mrs. Gladstone's main theme after her husband. Almost the last words I heard Mr. Gladstone say was when his daughter came in with a bundle of letters. "Is there anything important about Ireland?"

John Morley.' A STRANGE DISCUSSION.

"Yes." she said, "there's a letter from Mr.

President Harrison's "Southern Policy" Not & Subject to Be Considered

he asked.

Philadelphia North American. The Southern press has already begun to discuss the probable policy of the new administration, not as a whole, and hence not in any sense that need be discussed, but its probable policy "toward the South." It is neither necessary to consult General Harrison, nor to sit down and wait for the new administration to declare itself in speech and action before answering the question. The North American pretends to no knowledge respecting the mind of the Presidentelect, but it can answer the question put by the Southern press. The policy of the new administration toward the South will be identical with its policy toward the North, toward the East, nd toward the West. The policy, home and reign, of the new administration will be ional American. Think for a moment of a journal published where in the United States gravely discussing the question of the policy of the federal government toward any State or States of the Union. We had almost said that such a discussion is unthinkable. The wonder is that men so bright and alert as are the leading journalists of the Southern States should not have recognized the gross absurdity of the discussion. The new administration is to be Republican, not only in name, but in fact, and it will see to it that the forms of republican government are maintained in every State without reference to its location. This is a republic. Every State in the Union is solemnly bound to maintain a republican form of government. > There will not be two policies nor ten policies in administering the internal affairs of the United States. There will be but one policy. It will be a national policy, the same in Maine as in Texas, in Pennsylvania as in Oregon-the same everywhere. We hope this direct answer to the question put and discussed by our Southern contemporaries will prove conclusive. We are one people. Whatever concerns man in Maine concerns him in Mississippi. Whatever federal law operates in Pennsylvacia operates in Maryland. We have no particular people in this country, no class, caste or condition which has any more or different rights one than another. Hence the policy of the new administration will be uniform-national. It will not be more liberal toward one section than it is toward another. This we think a good sort of policy. So far as citizens are concerned we are to recognize no wards, no orphans, no infants. The new administration will deal with all citizens as equals before the law, and it will strive to be just toward all, wherever they may be.

LETTER-CARRIERS IN SKIRTS.

Talk About Women for New Positions in the Postal Service. Philadelphia Record. It has been whispered, faintly but clearly, that the postal service may be reorganized under the new administration. First comes the rumor of the discharge of many letter-carriers, and then follows the startling report that the servers of mail are to be replaced in part by petticoated female letter-carriers. This is an appalling prospect, and the possibilities of trouble for unwary young men and frisky old men seem to be

Imagine girls toddling around the streets carrying bags and bundles of letters. Imagine the awful possibitities, and also the great advantages that will be thrown in their way. Every time a venerable business man, who has grown gray during the years he has served as a deacon and a dutiful busband, shall get a little square envolope, daintily scented, the female letter-carrier would wink a sly wink, and the venerable merchant would be obliged to hand over a dollar at least or take a trip out of town. If he should not settle up the female letter-carrier might go and interview his wife. In this manner the young girl of to-day may secure a brilliant future for herself. The female lettercarrier will also be able to utilize her position in other directions. If her fellow should open correspondence with other girls, she could find it out and go and pull their hair. By appropriating letters addressed to the pretty girl who lives a few doors below her she can find out all about the red-headed chap who calls there so frequently, and settle forever her suspicions that the red-headed man is none other than a collector for an installment clothing house, from whence came that new silk dress. If the female letter-carrier is smart she can also draw a weekly stipend, the price of her silence, from many of the alleged boarding-house keepers, who have so many boarders who come home late at night. Thus the female letter-carrier may enjoy the perquisities that are now the common property of every-day policemen. After having been in service for a brief time she will find out that letters intended for married women are mailed by the senders so as to arrive during the husband's absence, and she will also learn the mo-

his private correspondence addressed to the place where he buys his cigars. There is no end to what might be learned by these female letter-carriers when once initiated into the business. They will also have the advantage of getting all their own mail direct from the hands of Uncle Sam himself, as it were, and if an internecine war among the carriers themselves could be averted the girls might own the town. They would own it to such an extent that in a comparatively short space of time the mail service would be practically crippled and the postmaster would have so little confidence in his carriers that he would be obliged to deliver his own letters, even if they were to go out of town. THE THREATENED BREAK.

A Newspaper Becomes Alarmed and Pleads Piteously for a United Party in the South. Atlanta Constitution.

It is time to put the campaign of 1888 behind us, and address ourselves to the campaign of 1892. It is going to be desperate work, and it will require every man at his post and every throb of his heart at the service of his party to make victory possible. Let us agree on two things as a starter. First-It doesn't matter what beat us in 1888.

What we want to know-and what we must learn through patient, and earnest, and sympathetic searching-is, what will enable us to win in 1892? Second-Every word of criticism that Democratic pens write or Democratic lips utter. should be directed against the enemy and not against our comrades. Every man who is covered with the sweat of Democratic battle, should be dear to every Democrat. He is a poor soldier and a sorry fellow who would seek to raise on his party's disaster or profit by criticism of his The Democratic campaign was pitched with courage, fought with gallantry, maintained in dignity, closed without stain-and the defeat with which it ended should only draw us the closer together. There is more glory in a defeat that was bravely opposed and honorably met than in a victory based in wrong and wrought in dishonor. That Democrat is recreant who turns his face to the past that he may find fault with his comrades or petty justification of himself. The Democrat who turns his face to the future, determined to march to the Democratic music, whatever it may be, until the next campaign is fought and won, that is the right sort of Democrat. And that is just where we stand, and from this position we shall not be dislodged or shaken. The campaign of 1892 is already opened. On its successful issue everything essential to us depends. Let every Democrat put aside prejudice, pride, or whatever hindrance may possess him, and fall into line! There is no time "It is just fourteen bundred and fifty-four (1454) days, including Sundays, from 6 o'clock this morning, until the polls are opened for the election of a Democratic President."
